Chapter 1 by Fanwizard

"Breaking news. An asteroid is set on fatal collision to Earth within the next forty-eight hours. It's on a direct path and the collision is inevitable."

"An asteroid-"

"Scientists have-"

I turned off the TV. Every channel had news reports on the asteroid, the same one that would be colliding with Earth within two days. It would basically end all humanity because there was no way to stop it. There was no way to delay the collision.

Someone knocks on the door. Naturally, since I'm the only one home, I have to get it.

The door swings open, and I'm eye to eye with Christopher, my best friend and also the only person that I've ever had and will have a crush on.

It doesn't help matters that he's ridiculously handsome and doesn't even know it. He's a few inches taller than me, with turquoise eyes that have flecks of green and amber in them, straight sandy blonde hair that frames his face perfectly, a strong jaw, a cleft chin, and a dimpled smile.

"Brooke," his voice is slightly husky but he, nevertheless, smiles at me. "We're getting a closer look at the asteroid."

"WHAT?"

"Honestly Brooke, you didn't seriously think that since we're all about to die within two days that I'm going to let these two days go, did you?"

"Christopher, you have got to be kidding me. We're not even looking at the thing that's about to kill everyone?"

He used his finger to tilt my chin up to look at him, his impossibly beautiful eyes looking deep into mine. "It's time that you started living instead of just existing. I promise you that we're going to make these last two days the most memorable of our lives. Live like there's no tomorrow."
